Upland is wary of church that's a little different

By NANCY WALLACE Staff Writer

The view south from the corner of Arrow Highway and San Antonio Avenue is an unassuming one with some old trees, a chapel and a few

But the sign out front that says, "Astara, a Christian place of light" is a little different from other Upland churches - just different enough to make much of the community wary of Astara's practices, and enough to make some attempt

The symbol of Astara is the seven-pointed star holding the lotus flower, symbolizing the light rays as knowledge touching the flower, like the human mind, causing it to an organized movement against this atypical church.

Founders Dr. Robert Chaney and his wife Earlyne will mark Astara's 30th anniversary this weekend with a three-day celebration. They begin Friday night at 7:30 with a talk and slide show about the past 30 years. Chaney said the public is en-couraged to come and learn, but he sn't expect many non-members to walk through the door.

He explained Astara has opened its doors to Upland and the West End on several occasions since it moved to the old Upland College campus five years ago, but residents

He and his wife found much memorabilia from the college days when they moved into the buildings that had closed 10 years ago after the college went bankrupt.

They decided to offer these yearbooks, photographs and other items free to the public if they would drop by, walk through the display they prepared and pick up whatever items they wanted, Chaney said.

"No results," he recalled. "The community was not interested." Newspaper ads and fliers couldn't get the former Upland College students and teachers to come to Astara to collect their memories; but when the Chaneys took the items to another church across the street, people decided to pick up their memorabilia. Other open house efforts have yielded similar results.

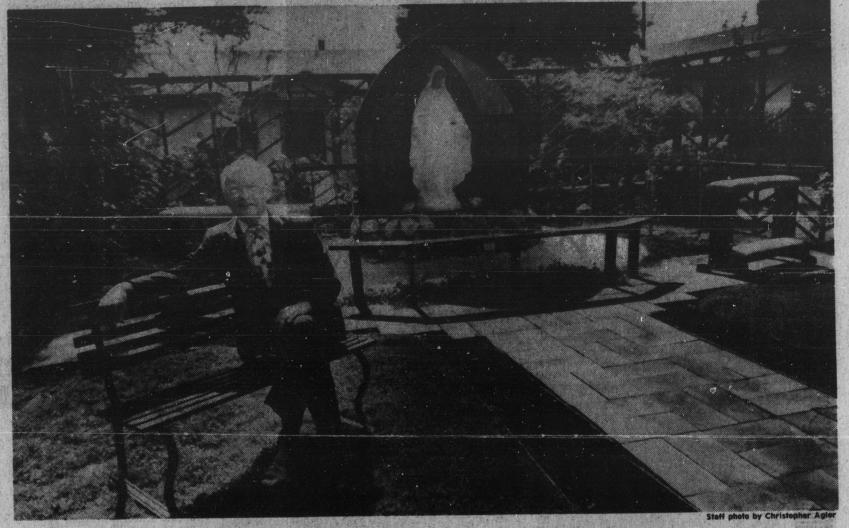

'When you use the word

'mysticism'...people get a little frightened," Chaney observed. Astarian "mysticism" includes such tools as meditation, Extrasensory Perception and astral projections to heal the body and reveal the divinity within each person, Chaney explained. "We don't try to go around and walk on water," he noted with a smile.

Nor do Astarians practice "rein-carnation worship" under "powers of darkness" within a "diabolical web of occultism," Chaney said. These were the words of a two-page flier distributed to many Upland homes in early September. Chaney said he was unaware of the flier until an Astara member found one slipped under his door, unsigned, and forwarded it to the church.

The flier stated Astara promotes use of the power of the Ankh, once used by the Druids in pagan rituals power of Satan. The symbol is similar to the Christian cross, but has a rounded top.

Chaney said this cross is a symbol of eternal life to many Egyptians today, but he is unaware that it is used

Dr. Robert Chaney, founder of Astara, relaxes in the Shrine of the Madonna, one of a handful of gardens spotted across the 10 acres of Astara. Chaney said his church has had "quite a challenge" renovating the grounds and buildings that were once Upland College, in devil worship and that it is not used in Astarian worship. Ankh crosses are available in the Astara bookstore along with Catholic and Protestant rosaries, and the symbol of the rising dove. Chaney noted that because it is available doesn't mean the church promotes its exclusive use.

'If the university has 'Mein Kampf' in the library, it doesn't mean it's teaching Hitlerism," he

The symbol they do use most is the seven-point star enclosing the lotus flower. This, he explained, represents the seven great religions as they shed rays of light, representing ideas, which causes the lotus, like the human mind, to open and receive them. He noted that although members are asked to receive and examine the many new ideas put forth in the lessons they subscribe to, they need not accept all of them.

Chaney said he and his wife began their church 30 years ago because too few teachings were combining the common teachings of the world's major religions.

"We had the idea that most religious expressions were too narrow," Chaney said. "If a person will be open-minded enough to study them (all religious teachings), he will notice there are great similarities in all great religions." An example, he said, is the golden rule, found with nearly identical wording in nearly all religions.

So they rented two rooms in an old house near Wilshire Boulevard in Los Angeles, using one as a sanctuary for Sunday services and the other as a office, moving their bookkeeping out of their Hollywood apartment. The demand for more information mushroomed, Chaney said, and his wife began writing the lessons out and reproducing them on a hand-operated mimeograph left vacant for 10 years before Astara purchased the property in 1976. Today the grounds serve as a retreat and conference center for non-profit groups, including the PTA and the Sweet Adelines.

Today Astara boasts 20,000 "members," actually subscribers to the lessons, in some 80 countries. About half of those members belong to a local community church and read Astarian teachings to augment their religious studies. The others, Chaney said, practice Astarian

And all subscribers have contributed, through their subscription fess and additional donations, to the renovation of what was a college and, before that, an army base.

Chaney explained that Astara's restaurant was once the mess hall of Camp Hahn, located near San Bernardino during World War II, or so he is told. The offices, the meeting rooms and even the immense college gymnasium were taken ece by piece and reassembled in Upland after the war, he said. He beams a bit when recalling the rich history of the rooms and halls that are now Astara, purchased five years ago for $430,000.

And he beams more when discuss ing plans for the future. He wants to someday see a landscaped shrine for all religions in the grass area that now reaches to Arrow Highway. He also wants to see a sort of philosophical museum, where the great religions are displayed for the public to understand. And the 10 acres with 25 buildings needs much more renovation — but all it takes is money, he noted.

Chaney said he is uncomfortable discussing the community's occasional unfriendliness, worried that it may result in increased an-tagonism. But it is a reality he has resigned himself to, he said, and he will carry on despite it. Astara, he said, will remain.

"We just finished paying off the mortgage," Chaney said with a proud smile. "Last week we sent in the final payment."

Upland mayor leads group opposing redistricting

By NANCY WALLACE

Staff Writer Upland City Council members gave the green light Thursday to Mayor John McCarthy to chair a coalition of foothill cities and businesses preparing organized op-position to the state Senate's proposed reapportionment plan. The plan, first released early last month, would take Upland out of the 32nd District and place it in the "East Sierra-Los Angeles Watershed District," set to include north Rancho Cucamonga, parts of east Los Angeles County, all of Inyo and Mono counties, and sparsely pop-populated areas of San Bernardino County.

McCarthy said the coalition includes representation from at least 10 foothill cities, several from Los Angeles County, and from many businesses and industries concerned with the proposed district. While the cities and private sector may lack influence separately, he noted, they may have an effect as a cohesive unit. McCarthy will chair his first meeting Oct. 23 at 7:30 a.m. at the Arbor Restaurant in Upland.

At earlier meetings, city council members said they objected to the proposed watershed district because they would be separated from the West End and representation of Sen. Ruben Ayala, D-32nd District.

In appreciation for "25 years of effective service," the council unanimously approved a resolution Thursday night honoring Ayala for having "always shown real concern for the welfare of his constituents" and "worked diligently in their behalf in each of his capacities as a

In an interview last mouth, Ayala explained that restoring Upland and north Rancho Cucamonga to his district — which would include the remainder of the West End and surrounding areas — may result in the district's loss of Pomona and part of San Bernarding.

urging the county Board of Supervisors to implement the two-cent gas tax increase available under the Foran Bill, SB 215.

The resolution states, "Upland urgently needs additional revenue to fund street and road maintenance," and notes that the state may not implement the tax without resolutions from counties representing two-thirds of the population of the state. Council members adopted the resolution with no discussion.

Reminding council members they will vote on a proposed 33 percent hike in city sewer rates, City Engineer Fred Blanchard explained the sewer operation is currently operating under a deficit.

He said the council agreed three years ago that the best method to make the system pay for itself would be to implement three "nominal" increases over three years, and this would be the last. The hike would mean most homeowners will pay $4 per month instead of $3.

Blanchard said city staff will meet with school representatives and members of the private sector before adjusting the present rate structure for business and industry. "There will be significant increases and decreases," Blanchard said.

Upland trustees OK workers pay hike

By NANCY WALLACE Staff Writer

Classified employees of the Upland School District received a 7 percent pay hike in their 21/2-year contract ratified by the board of trustees Tuesday night.

The contract also includes an improved benefit package, a hike in the mileage allowance from 18 to 22 cents per mile and increased minimum salary increase from 4 to 6 percent for employees receiving promotions. Trustees approved the package with no discussion.

In other action, the board approved a 7 percent salary hike for Superintendent George Renworth, bringing his salary to $50,290 per year. In the same motion, truste approved a four-year contract for Renworth after nearly an hour's

The board also approved a 12½ percent pay hike for daily substitute teachers and a 20 percent pay hike for long-term substitutes. The hikes take the daily pay from $40 to $45 per day, and the long-term pay from $50 to $60 per day.

Trustee Rick Minnis was the only trustee to oppose the hikes saying Trustee Rick Minnis was the only trustee to oppose the hikes, saying he could not approve increased salaries without a set evaluation procedure to guarantee quality teaching by substitutes.

The board also approved a "use of facilities" policy with the provision that groups using school facilities, including athletic fields, must have access to restrooms and that groups must pay for the school personnel needed to open, close and maintain those restrooms.

"The arrown of records out there

In other action, the council unanimously approved a resolution per day, per hour warrant restroom must pay for school personnel to come to campus on those days. Chairman Dina Hunter noted that this was the first reading of the policy, and that groups wishing to comment on the policy may do so at the November board meeting.

After a brief discussion, the trustees declared Jan. 15 Martin Luther King Jr. Day, an employee holiday, as it is already a state and federal holiday and children will not

The trustees heard a presentation by Loren Sanchez, assistant superintendent of instruction, on the district's revised evaluation procedure for administrators and

He explained that tenured teachers are evaluated annually by their administrator who is, in turn, evaluated by the superintendent's office on how well he or she uses those teacher evaluations to maintain and improve teacher performance. Administrators, he said, will be held responsible in part for teachers reaching their goals.

Casa Colina program is aimed at helping children

Pomona Children who have an extremely high energy level, are easily distracted or impulsive, out of control, angry, aggressive, depressed, hyperactive, or have a poor selfimage, can obtain help through a special 10-week group program beginning Monday at the Children's Services Center of Casa Colina

Hospital, Pomona.

The program, directed by David Drake, is designed to encourage and train these children between the ages of six through 12 to utilize their own self-motivation skills within a group of eight to 10 other children. The program also helps parents gain new insights and skills that will better enable them to improve their relationships with their children.

Uplander drops out of school board race

The field of candidates running for three board seats in the Chaffey Joint Union High School District was reduced by one Thursday when an Upland businessman dropped out

Michael Darlington, a corporate executive with an Upland-based finance company, said he will not seek a school board seat in the Nov.

Instead, he added, he will run for a seat on the Upland City Council next

"I had to decide what I wanted," he said. "I had to run for what I felt I could do the most good."

Darlington's announcement leaves six candidates in the race — Frank Brown, Robert LaFrance, Birt Martin, Charles Uhalley, Nan-cy Williams and Gerald Wolf.

The former candidate said he

after failing last month to get support from Associated Chaffey Teachers, the bargaining representative for most of the district's instructors.

"I didn't go over too well with the teachers," he admitted. "I've been in management all my life and I take management's point of view." Had he received the endorsement and possible financial backing from the teachers association, Darlington said he would have likely remained in the race. in the race.

Chaffey College will hold 1st open house

By ANDREA ADELSON Staff Writer

High school students and anyone interested in attending a community college is invited to jump on Chaffey College's "Shuttle to Higher Education;" day on Thursday from 8:30 a.m. to 2 p.m.

The college's first open house is intended to acquaint the public and students from 18 local public and private high schools within the Chaffey district with the 115 academic and vocational programs offered at the Rancho Cucamonga community

The day's event will include a convocation speech by the commander of the United States Air Force Test Center at Edwards Air Force Base, a performance by the college Jazz Ensemble and a possible sky diving

Each of the schools' 10 divisions will put on a number of workshops, scheduled at 9 and 10 a.m., varying from a typing contest in the business division to a video-tape produced by the Language Arts Division, said Jeanne Walker, an English teacher and coordinator of Shuttle Day.

Following the workshops at 11 a.m. visitors may peruse demonstrations assembled in the quad area, which will feature solar energy, court reporting and power sewing. Also on display will be a prize-winning glider built by Chaf-fey instructor Chuck Stark, Walker

Maj. Gen. Philip J. Conley Jr., who has been commander of the center since 1978, will discuss the need for education in the nation's space exploration program. The address will be presented at noon.

Between 11:30 a.m. and noon three skydivers from the Perris Parachute Jump Center are scheduled to make a jump into the campus

Shuttle Day is sponsored and financed by the college faculty sen-ate, said Walker, whose members chipped in about $200 to cover printing costs and a small fee for the sky-

Local issues panel to enhance 'clout'

A committee designed to bring issues of regional impact to the attention of lawmakers is being formed by officials in 10 local cities.

Tentatively named the Public-Private Sector Coalition for Clout, the group consists of a loose-knit alliance between chambers of commerce and city governments from Rialto to San Dimas.

Organizers of the coalition hope to come up with a group during a meeting next week in Upland.

Once the issues are agreed upon, the group hopes to make its feelings known on legislation pending or contemplated in Sacramento, Washington and San Bernardino.

"Cities can't stand alone anymore," said Upland chamber executive Tony Malone. "If we are to have our voice heard we have to get together on certain issues."

Malone joined with other chamber executives from Ontario, Rancho Cucamonga, Chino, Claremont, Pomona, Montclair, San Dimas, Fontana and Rialto in forming the group.

"For about a year the chamber people have been meeting just to share information," said Rancho Cucamonga's chamber executive Michael Jauron. "We were looking to establish a new kind of group that incorporates both the public and private sectors."

Although the goals of the colalition have yet to be formalized, Jauron envisions the group as a forum for the exchange of information that concerns the area

October 22, 1981 between Kellogg Hill and Colton and to lobby lawmakers on legislation that will affect the area.

"We're looking at possible area-wide topics like flood control, transportation, environmental quality, water and tourism. That's a partial list and maybe we wouldn't even address some of those issues. That has yet to be determined.

"But the potential for clout is great. The quality of this thing is that we carry more weight. Legislators can understand what we have to say as a combined voice."

Both Malone and Jauron said no city will be forced to participate in every lobbying effort of the "That's why we're proceeding cautiously," Jauron said. "We want to keep the sovereignty of each

Malone said the group decided to cross county lines because many issues do not stop at the Los Angeles-San Bernardino county line.

"We have a lot in common," Malone said, adding that La Verne is expected to join the group.

U.N. Day luncheon planned

A United Nations Day Luncheon will be sponsored at noon Saturday at the Faculty House of the Claremont Colleges, College Way and Seventh Street, Claremont, by the League of Women Voters of Claremont, the American Association of University Women and the United Nations Association.

Dr. P. Edward Haley, professor of government at Claremont McKenna College and Claremont Graduate School, will speak on "A Look at the Present Administration's Foreign Policy.' A panel of graduate students from Africa, Asia and the Middle East will respond to his remarks.

LAS gets $2 million

Lockbood Aircraft Service Co. in Ontario has been awarded a $2 million contract by the U.S. Navy Pacific Missile Test Center, Point Mugu, to modify two P-3A Orion aircraft with a Sonobuoy Missile Impact Location System (SMILS).

The contract grew out of a study Lockheed - Ontario conducted for the U.S. Navy to examine various combinations of strategic missile test equipment for installation on P-3 aircraft.

While at Lockheed -Ontario, the aircraft will have the avionics updated to improve navigational and display capabilities. Both aircraft are to be completed by the end of next year. The totally integrated SMILS system will be the first to be a permanent installation aboard an aircraft. The installation was developed using the aircraft, electronics systems and modification expertise of Lockheed -Ontario combined with the ASW (antisubmarine war-fare) expertise of the Lockheed - California Co., manufactureer of the U.S. Navy P-3 Orion aircraft.

Over the years, Lockheed - Ontario has modified a variety of Navy aircraft for special test and electronics missions, including the EP-3. WP-3, and DC-130A.

67-year-old Ontario man markets 'Medfly House'

By RICHARD PERAZA

Staff Writer Mediterranean fruit flies may be the scourge of California but they'll always have homes in Ontario - hundreds of them.

The home of the Hotpoint iron and the Graber olive can now add the 'Medfly House' to the list. Twe got them in most of the nurseries and flower shops. They're selling good;" Arie A. Garritson of Ontario said. The 67-year-old Air Force retiree said he's sold about 100 of them in two weeks and sales are picking up every day. He's hoping his tiny houses will become another Pet Rock. "The women are crazy about them," he said. "My goal is to sell a million of them at $1.25 each... I'll be a millionaire."

His product is a small, wooden bird house, less than two inches across. One side of the roof has the words "Med Fly House" written across it and the other side has a small plastic fly perched on it. The whole thing hangs on a length of wire.

They come in four basic colors: red, yellow, wood-grain and California

Garritson said they look best stuck in potted plants. "That's not a real medfly," he said displaying one of the houses. "It's got no orange spots." He said he'll have a stamp to color the wings soon but he'd really rather have access to real, plastic-coated medflys.

The tiny houses cost Garritson about 25 cents each to make and he sells them to merchants for $1.25, who in turn sell them for $2.50, he said. He said it's a bargain when you consider Pet Rocks were $5 each.

"I can crank out maybe 100 of them in five or six hours," he said. He makes them all by hand but Garritson said a flea market merchant is considering ordering them in 500-home lots and the Ontario man may need to hire a work force to keep up with demand.

A retired Air Force mechanic, Garritson said he was sitting on his porch listening to the radio when he got the idea for the Medfly House. "They were really ribbing that poor (Gov.) Brown. I'm not against Brown or the

"I made one and stuck it in a flower pot; they're really cute. Everybody's got plants in the house," he said.

Most local merchants buy them a dozen at a time, he said. Garritson said it's not hard selling florists on the idea. "I walk in and stick one in a plant. The minute they see it in the plant they say, 'Oh, isn't that cute.' There's no hesitation at all; they just say 'I want six or I want a

Merchants aren't reluctant to trust him to supply more, he said. "They see I'm from Ontario and I'm no fly-by-night (pun intended)."

People who spot him walking cown the street with a fistful of Medfly

Houses often stop him to ask questions and buy, he said. "I look to sell a lot of them at Christmas time. Garritson said he's not the only one cashing in on medflys. He said he's heard of one man who seals them in plastic and makes key chains out of

"I heard there was a guy on the Golden Gate Bridge with horns on his head and a sign saying save the medfly," he added. A Fullerton man, Garritson said, has created a medfly game. "I wanted to get hold of him and trade a house for a game. Garritson said he's applied for a patent on his tiny homes for flys and he's sure the public appetite for medfly souvenirs won't die right away, but he does have other options in mind.

"At one time, in my mind, I wanted to make a mosquito house," he said. "I never did it ... but now I might."

LAX passengers being urged to fly into OIA

By RICHARD PERAZA Staff Writer

Ontario International Airport could experience a surge in passenger loads during the next two years because of Los Angeles construction projects.

Jack Graham, director of facilities planning for the Los Angeles Department of Airports, told members of the Friends of Ontario International Airport recently that LAX officials are urging their passengers to fly Ontario and avoid traffic snarls generated by $750 million in new construction.

Robert Quincey, OIA manager, said an LAX airport information radio message now urges drivers to avoid traffic congestion and go to Ontario instead.

Graham said airport officials know the worse-than-ever LAX traffic will chase more passengers to Ontario but nobody knows how

"There are no projections on how much," he said. "It's almost entirely up to the airlines and their new flight schedules."

He said Ontario will get less use if passengers have trouble getting flights to where they want to go. 'We're hoping we can get more to come out here. It will make our construction easier," he said. The magnitude of the construction at LAX alone should be enough to chase passengers to OIA, Graham

Plans include construction of "an elevated roadway," a second tier of traffic to be built directly over the existing five-lane airport roadway

Built like a massive bridge structure that follows the existing roadway route, construction will necessitate closing down, section by section, almost all portions of the roadway at some time during the next two years.

"That will cause some minor traffic problems," Graham said, noting that traffic will slow to a crawl in sections where construction is going on. The Los Angeles airport is also getting two new terminals; one of them for international travelers.

The international terminal will be massive, with more floor space than all of LAX's existing buildings combined, Graham said.

"We're losing a lot of parking for terminal construction," he said. Workers and equipment will be spread over many of LAX's interior parking lots, he said, so even if passengers get there, they're not likely to find much parking.

Graham said airport officials hope to alleviate a parking shortage by building more satellite lots along

Upland News; Rancho Cucamonga Times; Montclair Tribune the LAX perimeter and connecting them with trams but that construction will take time.

> The second new terminal — the new Terminal No. 1 for domestic airlines - won't be as big but construction activities won't make drivers happy. It's located at the entrance to LAX, according to

Even the portions of the airport dedicated to cargo will be congested, he said. "We're developing a big, new complex. Cargo City is pretty well saturated."

Graham said construction of various phases of the projects should continue for about two years.

The target date for completion is in time for the 1984 Olympics, he

High-wire family

Mom and Dad work thin line above Sea World

By BETH MOHR
Copley News Service
The other afternoon, 4-year-old Lejana Troffer ran into the room talking about the preschool class she had just left and asking if she could change into her pink dress.

Her brother, Nikolas, 2, climbed into his mother's lap whining feepily that he did not need a nap. Delilah Troffer put aside her sewing to cuddle her little boy and exclaim over her daughter's school

It all sounds pretty typical of a young family.

But, it wasn't. The setting was a dressing room behind the circus ring at San Diego's Sea World. Lejana's pink dress was a tutu. Nikolas was wearing clown makeup, and the mother had been sewing on a black, one-shoulder costume trimmed with blue and lver sequins and faceted silver

Four times a day Delilah Troffer climbed 30 feet above the ring side Mission Bay to perform gaspevoking, high-wire stunts of mazing grace and balance with her usband, Terry, and Michael Brevig, the other aerialists in "The Zaltanas" troupe.

The granddaughter of the late Karl Wallerda, patriarch of the renowned and tragedy-plagued "Great Wallendas" family of highwire performers, Delilah, now 28, links she was about 2 or 3 years dds old when she made her first fforts to balance on the wire.

'I really don't remember when I arted," she said. "But, I didn't gin to perform professionally ntil I was 18 or 19. My parents anted me to graduate from high chool and decide where I wanted to from there."

It was not too surprising that she pted for a career on the high wire.

n addition to her grandfather, her mother, brother, aunt and a number of cousins had made the same decision. But, none of them gave her much encouragement. They were too familiar with the dangers. Her mother retired from the high wire

One of the most devastating erformance accidents in circus istory had struck their family.

On Jan. 30, 1962, the Wallendas were appearing with a circus in the Detroit Coliseum.

In their most spectacular stunt, "The Chair Pyramid," six performers were to cross the wire in two tiers, those on the upper tier would be balanced on bars braced by those walking the wire in the lower tier. The seventh performer would stand on a chair balanced by the second tier to form the top of the

The formation was accomplished but then one person lost his balance. The pyramid tumbled,

Two of Delilah's cousins were killed and one was paralyzed. Another cousin and her grandfather were less seriously injured. The other two cousins were able to cling to the wire and escaped with minor injuries. The family's reticence to encourage Delilah's interest is

"My parents didn't want me on the high wire when I was young," she said. "They didn't mind if I did less dangerous things, and I began performing in other circus acts when I was really small. My dad had a dog act and I used to work with him. I rode the elephants sometimes, did the parades and assisted in various other acts."

With an inborn tendency for the high wire, Delilah started practicing on her own.

"My grandfather taught me, but not a lot," she said. "He would come by, see me practicing and say, Look, do this or do that.'

"He gave me little tips and never encouraged me to do any tricks." Her close companion as a young girl was her cousin, Rietta Jordan, who now is a high-wire performer as well. They practiced the fundamentals of balance and worked out some of the stunts her grandfather and other family members had made famous.

One was the "backward revolve," in which two male performers cross the high wire carrying a pole about 10 feet long braced on their shoulders. Two women performers revolve around the pole, going in opposite directions.

They also learned the chair pyramid, with three people instead of seven. Two men brace the pole between them on their shoulders. The woman performer balances a chair on the pole and, as the men walk the wire, she stands and then sits on the chair

Delilah remembers that the first time her grandfather saw her do the stunt, he gasped and shouted, "You learned that behind my back."

She was 19 when he allowed her to work with his act.

"He didn't suggest that I do any tricks," she said. "He thought I was just something to look pretty and to

The first time she did the chair pyramid in her grandfather's act, he as watching her from a wheelchair.

The day before, he had fallen from the rope which performers use to descend from the high wire.

She had been working with him for six years when, on March 21, 1978, he went to San Juan, Puerto Rico, to do a "skywalk" 10 stories above the ground between two hotels. He fell to his death during the stunt.
"I wasn't with him," Delilah said.

"I was home in Sarasota (Florida) recovering from an illness.

She and her husband married at the start of their professional careers. They had met as high school students.

'Circus school extracurricular activity in Sarasota schools," Delilah said. "My grandfather had a circus that he took out for two months in the summer. He used to take along some of the circus school kids who thought they wanted a circus work career. That gave them a chance to see what the life was really like."

One summer, Terry went along. "He liked the life," Delilah said. 'Then, he started on the high wire and then we got married.'

They don't dwell on the tragedies of the past. At age 8, Delilah did not feel the real impact of the 1962 accident and her family protected her from it as much as possible.

"I was too young to understand what had happened," she said. "I knew that everybody was terribly upset and I knew I didn't see some of the people.

"That didn't effect me too very much. But, my grandfather's fall did," she said. "I had worked with

When we asked how it happened they said a 15-mile-an-hour wind knocked him off the wire. We didn't believe that. He had worked in wind

"This may sound morbid, but we watched the fall on TV. We had to see what did happen to prevent anything like it from happening again."

The family decided that the problem was in the rigging of the wire. Performers either rig their own wires or check them carefully before each performance. Wallenda was working with new riggers and his family decided that despite all the checking, he would have been unable to see the problem until he approached it.

'Instead, the side wires were stretched from about a foot-long piece of rope extended from the walking cable," Delilah said.

Whether it is from the assurance gained from understanding the causes of accidents or from a lifetime of experience, Delilah does not climb to the wire with fear.

"We practice for months, sometimes years, before we go up high," she said. "We begin at two feet off the ground, then go to 10 feet and finally — when we know the stunt — to 30 feet."

High-wire artist Delilah Troffer gets ready to begin a performance with her children. Nikolas, in clown makeup, and Lejana, as a budding ballerina.

Plant a nectarine tree in your own backyard

Nectarines are that delicious summer fruit that you will find in your supermarkets now. But why buy them when you could have your own tree right in your backyard? Just ask your local nurseryman about available container trees or wait until bare root season arrives (January - March every year).

Peaches and nectarines are very similar. The biggest difference besides taste is the skin of the peach is fuzzy and the nectarine's smooth. With all the new varieties on the market, you will find that you can grow nectarines in most areas of the state. They will do their best, though, if planted in areas that receive some chilling in winter, says the California Association of Nurserymen.

Plant your nectarine tree in the sun in a well - draining soil. Give it regular feedings of fertilizer and a heavier pruning than most other fruit trees. Just as you protect peach trees from peach leaf curl and peach tree borer, you should spray your nectarine tree at least twice, once in November and again in January juts before the buds

Most nectarine varieties on the market today are selfpollinating but by planting two different varieties, pollenization will be enhanced. Those of you with limited space to plant do not have to be left out. There are good dwarf varieties to plant in tubs on a balcony or patio and even ones that have been espaliered.

The pleasing color, fragrance and delectable flavor of the nectarine makes it one of the more popular fruits. And by planting this fruit in your own backyard, you can have this tasty fruit any time you want during its summer fruiting season.

The scientists know that the gas is abiogenic because the rift from which it freshly chilled lava millions of homes is of the oceanic methane, plastic mantle beneath the Earth's crust. Crystal sediments, including natural gas deposits, are nowhere near the rift.

There are two theories about the origin of the abiogenic methane. One is that it is simply present in the mantle. Others argue that mantle methane cannot exist because it would be unstable and that, instead, the methane is formed in chemical reactions as lava ascends to the Earth's surface.

The new, more abundant methane plumes were found

Scientists find intriguing clues to beginning of life

By BOB CORBETT Copley News Service

How did life begin on Earth? The continuing creationism vs. evolution debate in the public schools across the nation shows to what extent two competing theories can evoke passion in religious and educational circles.

But the question is also a matter for debate - albeit a more dispassionate one - within scientific circles where there have long been many competing ideas

Now researchers at the Salk Institute have found a clue that could show how life got its start 3.5 billion years ago. The clue involves zinc, one of the four most common minerals and one of the most versatile found on Earth.

And the researchers are pursuing this idea with zest. They have already used certain forms of zinc to create small chains of nucleotides, the basic units of life. These chains make DNA (deoxyribonucleic acid) and RNA (ribonucleic acid), which carry the gentic code.

The scientists, headed by Dr. Leslie Orgel, one of the world's leading experts on just how life began, are excited about their progress

LOS ANGELES — The ochre paint is peeling from the frame house slammed into the hillside above the Sunset Boulevard barroom. A breeze catches the curtains and blows them outside. There are no screens to keep out the flies. The heat and the fetid air go with the territory.

The view from the porch looks south on sleaze - cheap clubs, concrete, hard dirt yards paved in broken glass. The open doorway leads into a living room with threadbare carpet and overstuffed, blowsy furniture. Narrow stairs go up to a bedroom where mirror tiles share wall space with love-in posters and a brilliantly colored, tacky tapestry of Christ as the Good Shepherd. Claire is standing in the bedroom, beside the double-bed mattress on the floor. A black-and-white kitten is curled on the pillows. Claire has long, wavy brown hair. Her face is pretty without makeup. Her crushed cotton top and slacks are the same dull brown as the house. She is eating two fish fillets from a cracked plate.

She says she needs protein for her baby, which is due in four weeks.

I came to this place above the bar just west of Silver Lake in the middle of a Hispanic ghetto to find Claire, the daughter of a good friend. I remember her as a girl full of laughter, living in a Midwestern house surrounded by trees and flowers.

In the spring of 1980, Claire was a freshman at the state university. Like many freshmen away from home for the first time, sometimes she was confused and depressed.

Then she met David, with his soft eyes and slight mustache. She joined a religious cult. Despite her mother's pleas, she left with him and she got pregnant. Now they are here, waiting for David, a drummer, to be discovered.

But Claire tells me she is going home after the baby is born. She says David is a disappointment. He doesn't want to be a father, doesn't want the responsibility of the child she is building with health foods and exercise and plans for natural childbirth.

Vine to shop for baby clothes, for something pretty to wrap up her first-born. She is living on welfare, she says, and can only afford the basic things like diapers and some blankets from the discount store.

Claire has never been far from her neighborhood in the months she's been here

Instead she has cooked and cleaned for David and the band's manager and the others who come to crash at the house of free spirit with the peeling ochre paint. She would not believe me if I told her the adventure she's on is dated, the house a time warp from the '60s, the young men freeloaders who are using her.

And so we talk, instead, about the Midwest she remembers, about green grass and clear water, trees and clean air. These are her experiences, the sum total of her 19 years.

And we talk and talk about the baby. It could all be boring if it were not so important

Claire is entranced with the life inside her. She will not bring the baby back to the house, she says, where her creative lover devotes himself to the expression of his art at the expense of his responsibilities.

She has sat alone at night and listened to the drumbeat of his expression coming up from the bar below, the heartbeat of his passion lost in the city sounds.

She needs her mother, she says, and she came to realize that need is more important than her pride, than losing face. Her chin is firmer. Her eyes are clear. She's done with crying. Admitting it was all a mistake wasn't as hard as she expected.

Like thousands before her and thousands to come, she will go home sadder but wiser, convinced the cliche of her experience is unique.

I told her I would come back to the house when she calls, to take her and the baby to the airport.

It's a knotty problem, this question of how to create life out of totally inert material, to breathe life into clay, and they are not prone to make exaggerated claims.

What they hope to do, they say, is to show what might have occurred under primitive earth conditions that may have resulted in the first molecules of life.

The problem, Orgel explained during a recent interview, is that life as it functions now depends on certain enzymes called polymerases. These enzymes are like biological glue and are needed to assemble the proteins of which all life is made.

On the early Earth no such enzymes existed. That's because the enzymes themselves are proteins and can only be produced by living cells.

If there were no living cells, his argument goes, there could be no enzymes and without the enzymes, no protein. No protein, no life. It's a biological blank wall, a genetic Catch-22

The situation suggests that there's something else besides the enzymes which got the life process going. Several years ago, Orgel and his group began to look at the active properties of various metal ions, metallic forms which have had a change in their atomic structure. Such ions, they reasoned, must have been present in large quantities on the early Earth.

The idea of the experiments was to mix the metal ions with performed nucleotide chains and then see if this chemical soup would reproduce the chains. Reproduction, of course, is one of the key features of life.

They tried lead ions and found them to be highly energetic, producing large amounts of very long chains. However, the chains were not reproduced accurately. Also, the chains had little resemblance to modern life structures.

Then, they found that certain zinc ions performed better. Although zinc produced fewer and shorter chains, there was more accuracy and the nucleotide chains conformed better to the real thing.

Apparently, Orgel said, there is something in the geometry of the zinc ions that makes them react to the environment in a way that's suggestive of life

Zinc products today are used in a wide variety of ways, as a galvanizing agent to protect steel in storage tanks, pipelines and ship hulls and in the production of automobiles, hardware, electrical appliances, business machines, ceramics, fabrics, cosmetics, drugs and even

There are still many problems

"It's a modest reaction," Orgel says. It doesn't seem to work for all four of the amino-acid bases that are seen in DNA. Salk researchers are still trying other methods of making the zinc ion reaction work in these other areas.

The question the Salk researchers are pursuing is an important one, especially for evolutionary theories. Back in the early 1950s, Dr. Stanley Miller and the late

Dr. Harold C. Urey demonstrated that they could create certain amino acids by passing electrical discharges, simulating lighting, through a mixture of gasses thought to duplicate the atmosphere of the early Earth. They performed the experiments at the University of Chicago. Since that time, other scientists have succeeded in producing almost all of the 21 amino acids that are necessary for life by varying the mix and using other energy sources, such as ultraviolet radiation.

Amino acids are the units out of which the nucleotides

The question, however, is how to assemble these units into a chain, like DNA, that can reproduce itself, a process that can make life possible. The Salk research with zinc ions hints at a possible mechanism.

Over the years, there have been many suggestions as to just how these amino acids could be concentrated in sufficient quantities to allow the replication process to take place. Orgel has indicated that the genesis area might have been frozen ponds. Others have put forward the idea of shallow warm-water basins or springs or clay deposits that would guard and nurture the nucleic acids.

Although Orgel does not think the zinc process is the total answer, he noted that zinc deposits could have existed near any such areas.

The question the pursuit of the orgin of life is being vigorously examined at Salk, according to Orgel.

Counsel can help to soothe inner anxiety

By REV. LEE TRUMAN Copley News Service

Whether we go out of our way to produce anxiety in our lives or whether it just happens, it has been, is and will be a part of life. One situation can produce anxiety in one person, and not affect someone else, but anxiety will

This week, I have asked people what they were anxious about. A few of the comments were as follows: "I am going to the hospital for a few tests, on orders from my doctor. I am wondering what he really suspects," and, "My mother lives back East - she is old and does not take good care of herself." An older man said, "I am a manager in a business which is closing its doors. I have worked here most of my life and it is all I know. Where is a man my age going to find another job?

Rabbi Liebman put his finger on something basic in his book, "Peace of Mind," when he said, "Man has to pay the price of fear and worry in order to be human."

The kinds and the intensity of each of our fears may vary but asking each person what's bothering them and being close enough to them to get an honest answer, you will find that in one degree or another, they feel guilty, have emotional and/or physical pain, are suffering loneliness, feel inferior or are afraid of the future. Beneath the skin of all of us, we have regrets over some things in our past and we seek reassurance for our

Anxiety, in short, is the tension of the feared unknown. Anxiety's weaker cousin is worry. Anxiety eats at a person on the inside while worry is likely to be communicated to everyone you meet. The weaker relative of worry is fretting which is pointless complaining without thought of changing anything. This is the relief to one's own petty inner turmoil.

Anxiety is much more serious and much more deepseated. It causes more damage and it is more difficult to cure. Worry can be taken care of by a little advice and some action. Fretting can be controlled by self-control. Anxiety will not respond to either action or self-control.

There are no quick, easy answers for anxiety. Counseling takes the role of trying to bring as much light to the cause of the anxiety as possible. Often I have found that the feelings of anxiety will dry up when it is out in the

The second step in counseling is the broadening of the person's vision. Children learning to ride a bike are so preoccupied with keeping their balance and coordinating their effort that they look neither to the right or left but with their tense, tight grip and their preoccupied manner, they can ride right into anything. With this kind of anxiety, you help the person to look ahead, relax and miss a few of the bumps in life.

Anxiety can grow into its big brother, neurosis. This, without question, needs professional help as soon as

Dinner meeting set to honor missions

On Sunday, Oct. 25, many local churches of the 1.8 million-member United Church of Christ across the nation will celebrate the start of the far-flung American missionary movement 175 years ago. Members of Southland churches will meet at the Claremont United Church of Christ, Congregational, to hear Dr. David M. Stowe, executive head of the United Church Board for World Ministries who will address a dinner meeting climaxing the day's events. Dr. Stowe will also preach at the morning service of the Claremont church.

The Foothill and San Bernardino Associations of the United Church of Christ will hold their quarterly meetings here in order to join in the celebration.

The story behind the oldest foreign mission board in America, of which Dr. Stowe, is leader, is dramatic. In the summer of 1806 five Williams College students sought refuge from a torrential downpour on the lee side of a farmer's haystack near the banks of the Hoosic River in Massachusetts. Caught up in the religious revival then sweeping New England, the five young men had gone to the river to pray. One of them, Byram Green, later described what happened. He recalled that while the storm raged on, their conversation turned to 'the moral darkness of Asia."

It was at that point a freshman, Samuel Mills, proposed that they themselves must carry the Gospel to that far-off land. In earnest response the five knelt in solemn prayer.

"We can do it if we will," young Mills declared, expressing the feeling of all. These words soon became the rallying cry of the American foreign mission movement. Throughout the colonial period, missionary efforts had been almost exclusively directed toward the Indians. The fact that colonists had "nonbelievers" at their very doors and that the means of communication with Asia were so poor and so expensive had confined the work to this country

But the haystack prayer meeting was the spark that lit the flame of foreign missions. Today in a letter to churches carrying on missions in 57 foreign countries Dr. Stowe writes:

"It is fitting that we give thanks to God for those five oung students whose vision, faith and determination led to the vast American foreign missionary movement. 'It is more important, however, that we use this occasion to catch the vision of where God is leading us in our

Pressure treated wood decking can add functional good looks

Homeowners now have a choice of lumber products for building ever-popular, durable wood decks. Pressure treated wood is a widely available, economical alternative to the traditional wood such as redwood and cedar.

Pressure treated lumber has long been the choice of professional builders to combat the ravages of moisture and decay, but recently the use of pressure treated wood has been discovered by those involved in decorative landscaping and home improvement projects.

Natural wood decks are an ideal way to express your own personal lifestyle. Many homeowners, for example, have discovered the pleasures of a spa sunk into a beautiful pressure treated wood deck can be easily constructed.

Decks can solve many landscaping problems, such as an uneven terrain. Add a spa, and you have an even more attractive appearance and new usefulness for a problem

In any outdoor construction, it is important to use wood that will last. Wood is an organic material and is subject to deterioration when attacked by decay or termites. And, all wood is especially vulnerable to attack when used in the ground where it's subjected to constant moisture, which promotes decay. Pressure treated wood is the alternative that has been developed over years of experience to provide dependable performance and durability in outdoor use.

To achieve durability, pressure treated wood has been impregnated with preservative chemicals that are forced, under high pressure, into the wood. This process locks the preservatives permanently into the wood in sufficient quantities to resist attack by termites and decay-producing fungi. The Forest Products Laboratory of the U.S. Department of Agriculture has concluded that wood that has been pressure treated properly will last in excess of 50 years.

The entire deck can be built of pressure treated wood. Check with your local lumberyard or home improvement center. Most retailers carry a good selection of pressure treated lumber.

The treated wood will have a light green or copper green tint when new, but, left exposed outdoors will gently weather to a silver-gray. Pressure treated wood requires no finish, but will take and hold a paint or stain well, since the treatment process does not change the natural characteristics of the wood.

A deck is only as strong as the understructure and posts. A post in the ground should be properly pressure treated for durability, and it's important to remember that a concrete footing around the post does not protect the wood from moisture and decay. To assure proper pressure treatment, the post (and other wood used in deck construction) should bear the LP-22 mark of the American Wood Preservers Bureau, the quality control agency for the wood preserving industry.

Here are some hints for building a wood deck that will bring pleasure for years:

 Plan the project well. Make sketches and exact measurements of the area to be covered.

— Check local building department for permits and applicable code requirements.

Design proper footings for your soil and terrain.
 Make a materials list of lunber sizes, tools, fasteners.

Allow for wood shrinkage, particularly for deck boards.

To prevent splitting, pre-drill nail holes on the ends of deck boards and use only hot-dipped galvanized nails.
 When handling any wood, use protective eye-wear

Pressure treated wood can be used for all parts of the deck including steps, rails, benches, and planters. With the right equipment, planning, and pressure treated wood, you can build a deck that will add value to your home and bring you and your family and friends beautiful place for get-togethers. And, with pressure treated wood, your deck will last for years.

Classified is the solution...

... Now, what's the problem?

Jeff came down with new car fever this summer when he saw the car of his dreams advertised at a terrific price in Classified. He would have bought it right away that very day, except for one slight problem. He already had a car-and a good one at that.

> A real problem you say? Not really.

You see, Jett advertised (at a low rate, we might add) his old car for sale the next day in Classified. And before he knew it, his old car was sold and he was driving his beautiful new car home!

Remember, when it comes to your buying and selling problems, the solution is right before your eyes-
